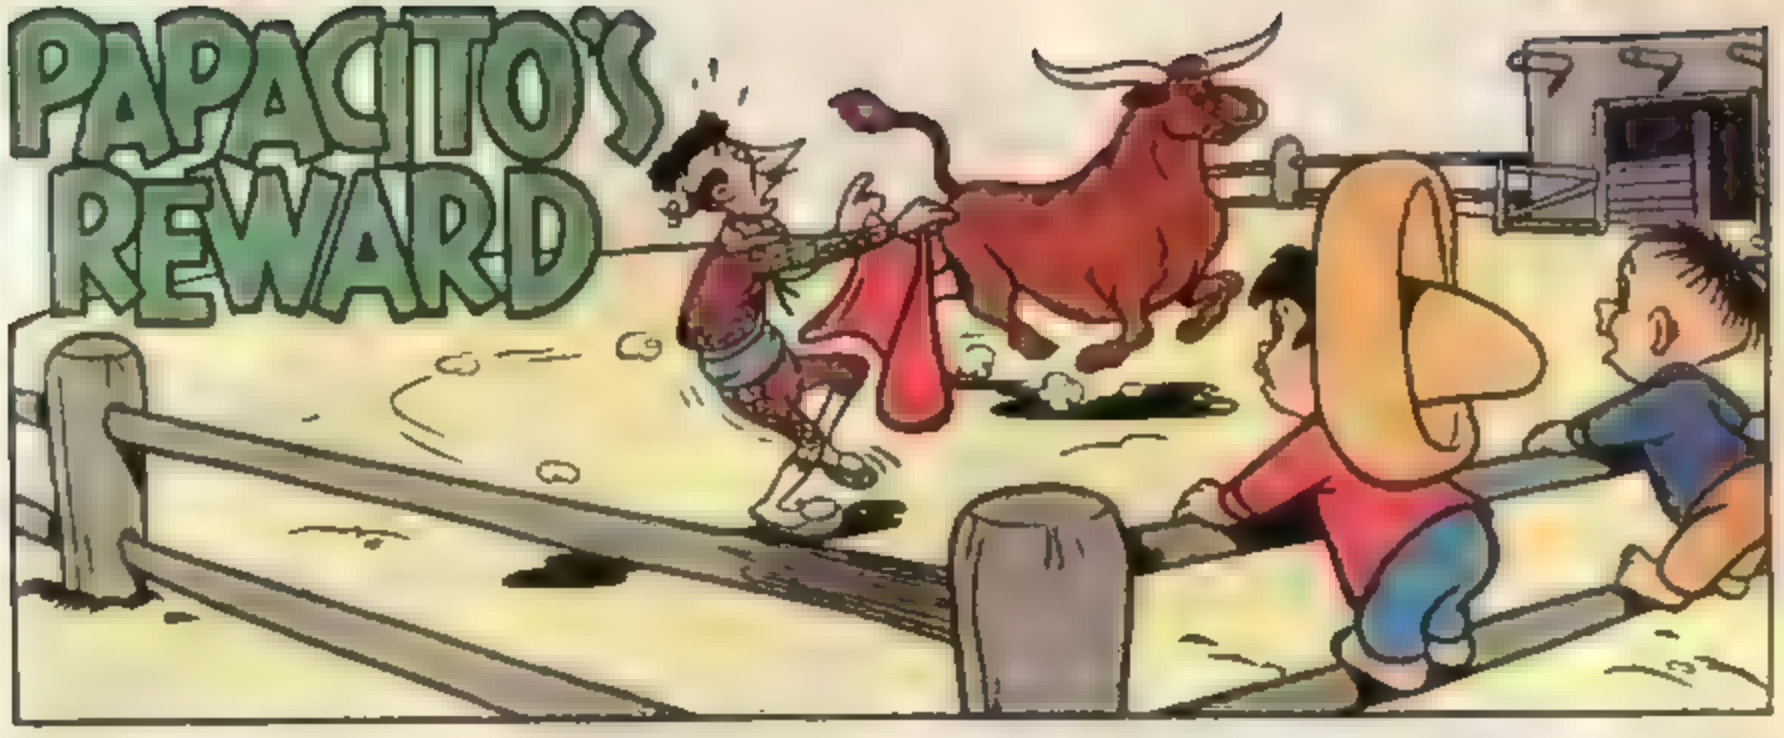
PAPACITO'S REWARD



Little Pancho stood high on a hill overlooking the Rich Ranchero's bull pen. Down below, he could see his father, Papacito Vanilla, just about ready to take on El Stabo, the fiercest bull in all the provinces.

Pancho wrung his hands anxiously. "Poor Papacito," he sighed with distress. "Training the Rich Ranchero's mighty new bool weel almost surely frighten heem out of his wits!"

Just then, Pancho's friend Ramon appeared, puffing, at the top of the hill. "Pancho!" he called out excitedly. "I have beeg news to tell you!" He paused just long enough to catch his breath. "A Señor Cheato, he is going around bragging of the treek he has played on the Rich Ranchero! Instead of selling heem the fierce El Stabo, he has substituted El Meeko, twin to El Stabo!" He shook his head disapprovingly. "El Meeko is a worthless bool. He is color-blind, and he wants only to play."

Little Pancho's face lighted up as he pointed to the bull pen. "Then it ees El Meeko Papacito is about to train! Come, we must go tell heem at once! He weel be overjoyed with relief!"

But by the time Pancho and Ramon reached the bull pen, however, Papacito was already in action. And, although El Meeko was prancing harmlessly about, Papacito was, indeed, shaking in his boots. "So beeg, thees El Stabo!" he shivered, holding out the red cape with trembling hands. "So fearsome! I would run but my feet do not do what I tell them from fear!"

Pancho saw the Rich Ranchero leaning over the pen, and dashed to his side.

"Pardon me, Señor—" he began.

But the Rich Ranchero was too engrossed to be bothered. "Not now, Pancho. Better you should watch how nobly Señor Vanilla pursues the mighty bool!"

Just then, Papacito found strength in his legs and fled to the door of the bull pen. Flinging it open, he ran outside. Pancho rushed over to him and explained the hoax. "Go back, Papacito," Pancho grinned, "it ees only El Meeko!"

At that moment, a great snorting bull charged across the ranch with Señor Cheato in hot pursuit.

"I did not close the door to the bool pen!" Papacito gasped. "El Meeko got out!" He flung himself at the mighty bull and landed on its back. "Geeve me a ride, El Meeko!" he laughed. "I am worn out weeth false fear of you!" and he rode him gayly into the bull pen and slammed the door shut.

"Papacito!" Pancho yelled, "that is El Stabo, for sure! He seeks out his twin!"

Pancho faced over to the Rich Ranchero and made him listen to his story. At that, the Rich Ranchero grabbed Señor Cheato and brought him to his knees. "So, you make fun weeth the Rich Ranchero, eh? For thees you weel pay!"

Meanwhile, Papacito swiveled his neck from bull to bull. "Eeny, meeny, miny, mo... too many bools! I theenk I go!" With a mighty leap, he jumped over the bull pen.

"You are a brave man, Señor Vanilla!" the Rich Ranchero beamed proudly. "And you shall not go unrewarded! Señor Cheato has given me El Stabo to make up for his deception, so now we have two new bools, and you shall train them both!"

Papacito groaned. "Booly for me!"
